

Documentation

Kai Daniel Gonzalez

August 17, 2022

Contents

1	The Start	1
1.1	Selection	1
1.2	Calculating Promises	1
2	Internet Subculture	2
2.1	Furries	2
3	End	2

1 The Start

This document documents the document, according to documentation when documenting a document, documentation should document the properties of a document using that document's documentation, if no documentation exists for that document then refer to documentation or create your own.

1.1 Selection

With that in mind, 70 documents were parsed last week, by me, for the documentation. The documentation is important for the documentation of documentation, but that's just being.

Instead of getting into the logistics and technicalities of the documentation, I'm going to let you figure it out.

1.2 Calculating Promises

9 times out of ten means that there's 9/10 chances of whatever you're challenging. But if you ever calculated it, it would evaluate to '0.9', so there's a 0.9 chance of success?

Think about it like this, if it works nine times out of ten, would it work 0.9 times out of ten? no.

0.9 is the chance it has of succeeding. Mathematically, the formula for success according to the SION (Science Institute Of Nowhere):

Logically, success is the reinterpretation of $\frac{x}{y}$, if you have 1/10 chance you need to get the ratio from 0.1-10

In our case, it would be 9 times out of ten chances, which means for 1 in every 9 tries it would fail, since we're getting the ratio as in 0.9 1 is (9 to 10)

2 Internet Subculture

There is many internet subcultures, such as furries, cosplayers, Otherkin, and more.

Personally, I feel that the discrimination that some subcultures get due to the nature of them is absolute trash, and the hate needs to stop (personally)

Now I wouldn't ever go out of my way to hate on the people who hate any internet subculture, because clearly they have their own problems. And instead of hating them, we should help our challenged brothers and sisters in understanding how us internet users enjoy doing certain things.

2.1 Furries

Furries are defined as people who enjoy anthromorphicised animals.. Is that how you spell that word?

Ahh anyway, uhm, furries get a lot of hate due to a few of them being attracted to animals, which is known as Zoophilia. A select amount of furries may fall under the category of 'Zoophiles' which is not the entire community. But sadly, the argument of some rotten apples does not work. People just don't listen, you could try to enlighten people but you can't teach anyone who doesn't want to listen.

3 End

This is the end of the EBFI. The Enlightenment Book For the Internet.